The Australasian Mechanical Copyright Owners Society Limited (AMCOS) is a copyright collection society that represents virtually all Australian and New Zealand music publishers and composers for the reproduction (“copying”) right and by way of sub-publishing contracts and reciprocal agreements with similar societies worldwide, many millions of international works. AMCOS’ rights have been administered by the Australasian Performing Right Association Limited (APRA) since July 1997 under a management arrangement between the two Boards. Both AMCOS and APRA are non-profit member-based organisations that distribute to their respective members all royalties, less the costs of administering those licensing schemes.

The reproduction of musical works is one of the rights – set out in the Copyright Act – that requires you to notify the copyright owner and pay the appropriate royalties. AMCOS – through its membership-base and reciprocal agreements with overseas copyright collecting societies – provides access to a vast number of local and international musical works.

You should also be aware that in your first licence year there is a non-refundable, recoupable advance of $550 (inclusive of GST) required.

NOTE: This is an application form only – it does not constitute a licence nor does it guarantee that a licence will be granted.

Please return your completed form to nonretlic@apra.com.au. Please be advised partially completed, unsigned or unclear applications will NOT be processed.

COLLECTION & AGENCY AGREEMENT

The public performance of music in the premises of your client requires a separate licence from APRA. Although you are highly unlikely to be liable for this licence, a number of background music suppliers take out the licence on behalf of the premises. In this way they can offer a “one-stop-shop” for music supply.

Are you interested in applying for a “collection & agency” agreement in respect of the public performance of music by your client(s)?
